Air pollution.

Dear People of NSW Environment Protection Agency

In your review, please consider the following:

Ninety thousand+ uncontrolled chemicals have been produced by civilisation in the last 100 years, and the living, and especially humankind, are often a fine blending of chemicals.

So the context could not be bleaker. It is a darkly polluted world.

There is sustained fine dust, and particles from the enormous expansion of open cut coal mining in the Hunter, of ever more frequent inland dry winds, at the expense of cleaner wind, coming off the ocean of the NSW Hunter coast, (and probably true now of much of the coastline).

The material that now settles on cars, etc, puts this beyond doubt. Despite the wild squall and heavy rainfall of La Nina, over the last six months, the squall left our car covered in particles and dust.

Time for piecemeal and band aid approach, to end.

There is no room for polluting operations in this dying world. Refer the biodiversity loss.

Stay safe, keep well,

Yours sincerely,

Graeme Tychsen
